Notes From the Conductor

I'm always fascinated by the way no loaf of homemade bread turns out the same when made by different people. The same ingredients, same amounts of ingredients but when all is finished, there is a difference – unlike shop bread which you can always count on to be the same – even if it is supposed to be a special sort.

Music is like this. The notes are written down on paper but that's the end of the similarity. The performer, the conductor, the hall, all these make a huge difference to what the score sounds like when it is realised.

Recordings are a bit like shop bread – all the inconsistencies are taken out, it's all rounded off and 'beautiful'.

Three cheers for community music and orchestras and thanks for a wonderful year – I have really appreciated the hard work done by each member this year.
